APARKER@REMINGER.COM

Alan Parker's civil litigation practice includes intellectual property, medical negligence, personal injury, professional liability, employment discrimination and breach of contract disputes. Several of Alan's cases resulted in the most significant defense verdicts in their respective years by the ABA Journal and the National Law Journal. In addition to litigation, Alan advises clients on intellectual property, management and protection strategies and internet and web-based commerce issues.

Alan frequently lectures and is a published author on trial practice, medical negligence and risk management, and the use of technology in civil litigation. He is also an active member in national and local professional organizations, especially those focusing on legal issues involving the internet and technology. Alan has organized and moderated seminars on information, surveillance and technology issues for governments, citizens and lawyers, as well as numerous continuing education programs on civil trial practice.
