An Introduction to Reminger’s Appellate Practice Group Newsletter

What are the components of an appeal? How long does the appeal process last? What are the standards of review in an appellate case? What is a post-trial motion? Reminger’s Appellate Practice Group will address these questions and more in upcoming newsletters, geared toward educating our clients on the intricacies of the appeals process at both the State and Federal appellate court level. In addition to the other myriad practice groups that support your business, Reminger boasts its own seasoned, in-house Appellate Practice Group with the proper background and skill set to argue your appeal.

Why Engage Appellate Counsel?

One of the most common questions posed by prospective clients is why engage appellate counsel? The answer is simple: in order to bring a fresh perspective and disciplined analysis to a case. Reminger’s Appellate Practice Group employs specialized training, experience, analytical skills and strategic thinking to help clients achieve successful outcomes at both trial and appellate levels. Our involvement begins with an assessment including realistic evaluation of our client’s position, immediate and long-term interests and the path most likely to realize those goals. We consult on trial and appellate strategies, significant dispositive motion practice, record preservation issues and a host of tasks essential to litigation success. We partner with our clients in order to:

- Ensure that any efforts predating our involvement are maximized
- Resolve cases by leveraging our knowledge, litigation skills and dedication
- Create long-term relationships based upon results and trust

Because the appellate forum differs fundamentally from the trial court, our appellate attorneys draw upon a deep appreciation of the appellate review practice and the art of persuasion to zealously represent our client’s interests and contribute to the development of the law.

Over the years, Reminger’s Appellate Practice Group has achieved exceptional results for our clients in a wide variety of appellate forums in all of Ohio’s and Kentucky’s state and federal courts of review, as well as on a national scale in matters involving a wide variety of disciplines, including:

- Employment and Labor Law
- Medical and Dental Liability
- Professional Liability
- Medical Malpractice
- Insurance Coverage/Bad Faith
- Probate and Trust Litigation
- Trucking and Commercial Transportation
- Products Liability

More information about the Appellate Practice Group may be obtained by contacting Holly Marie Wilson, who is certified as an “Appellate Law Specialist” by the Ohio State Bar Association. Please contact Holly or any one of our Appellate Practice Group members to discuss any topics from this newsletter or appellate-related questions.